

Ways to combat the shadow economy in Uzbekistan

Naminova Kermen Antonovna

Federal State Budgetary Educational Institution of Higher Education “Kalmytsky State University”, Associate Professor, Ph.D.

Shaimanov Zhavlonbek Bakhtiyorovich

teacher Navoi University of Innovation

Correspondent author:

Naminova Kermen Antonovna
naminovakermen@gmail.com

Received: 2023 15, Nov

Accepted: 2023 18, Dec

Published: 2024 13, Jan

Copyright © 2024 by author(s) and Scientific Research Publishing Inc. This work is licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution International License (CC BY 4.0).
<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/>

Open Access

Abstract

The shadow sector is also expanding in certain regions of Uzbekistan, which is due to minimal control over the movement of funds carried out through the banking system to the regions. As for measures aimed at reducing the growth of the shadow sector of the economy, today this is the tightening of measures to combat corruption, the expansion of organizations involved in the fight against the illegal economy, and also, every day, underground organizations are being discovered.

Keywords

radical liberal approach, repressive approach.

Introduction

Currently, the globalization of economy and society, the deepening of integration processes in countries leads to the erosion of the official borders between them. The developed world has come together to form alliances, eliminating borders is doing. In such conditions, it occurs in any corner of the world the advanced (in both good and bad) ways that have come is rapid is spreading all over the world. For this reason forms of manifestation of the economy, the informal economy, methods of their identification and evaluation, while against it fight (if necessary) or legalization directions research is gaining importance.

Materials: The main question facing our legislation is “How to deal with the constant growth of shadow activities in our country”? Specialists involved in research in the field of shadow economic activity put forward all sorts of ways to solve this problem in our country. The main goal of the fight against the shadow sector of the economy is the legalization of the official economy and the desire to eliminate the criminal economy.

In government authorities, public organizations and scientific institutions, two approaches to solving the problems of the shadow economy dominate.

The first is radical liberal, implemented since the end of 1991 and associated with targets for ultra-high rates of initial capital accumulation. Its result is: a critical increase in the scale of the shadow sector, the suppression of powerful financial and production clans.

The second is a predominantly repressive approach, which arose as a reaction to the negative aspects of the radical liberal approach. This approach involves expanding and strengthening units that can help reduce the level of illegal activity, such as the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the tax inspectorate, etc.

Today, in the context of the rapid growth of the shadow sector, our country uses such measures as: identifying underground industries, strengthening control over financial flows, preventing the laundering of “dirty” money, and tightening the fight against corruption. But these actions are not enough to significantly eliminate the shadow sector of the economy. Therefore, experts in this area are talking about making fundamental changes in macroeconomic policy, aimed at moving not to gross investment growth, but to the growth of effective investments that create competitive production.

Thus, all the measures I have given to reduce the level of shadow activity, taken together, will help reduce a fairly significant part of shadow activity in the country’s economy, stabilize the level of the economy, and also improve the economic structure of the country.

Today, the reason for the rapid growth of the shadow sector in the regions is the loss of control over the economy by the federal center. Most regions of Uzbekistan exist through the allocation (transfer) of funding from federal budgets. The existing system of so-called “transfers” opens up wide opportunities for carrying out shadow transactions. Financing of the region's subjects goes through the banking system, which entails all sorts of financial fraud. Therefore, the state should monitor more carefully: how the transfer went, what the funds were used for. After all, fraud with allocated budget funds, today, is the most common in the area of the so-called “enrichment” of officials.

Methods: Secret economy as a methodological category approaches are available, which include:

- the secret economy in the economic approach is global, macro and micro level as well as institutional aspects are studied;
- to the normative system of regulation in the legal approach relationship, that is, from official, state registration, control avoidance is considered;
- registration and accounting in accounting and statistical agencies not received;
- harm to the society and the individual in the criminological approach generating activities are taken into account

Results: Consequently, the scale of the shadow sector both in the country as a whole and in the regions is growing every year; our country is a major power, the level of the shadow sector of which is about 43% of GDP. These are very large numbers compared, for example, with European countries. We need to reconsider measures to combat shadow activities, firstly in the constituent entities of the federation, pay special attention to the areas of specialization of a particular subject, and also normalize the system of government bodies that are involved in identifying economic crimes in the structure of the shadow economy.

Conclusion: In conclusion, we consider the following necessary:

1. Create a truly market-based taxation system in order to ease the rigidity of monetary policy and increase domestic demand.
2. Creating a favorable investment climate to stimulate the development of priority sectors of the economy.
3. Reducing the bank interest rate is a necessary condition for reducing inflation. In this regard, banks are cautious in assessing the prospects for sustainable suppression of price growth, as well as the general situation in the financial markets.

It is necessary to develop and implement a program for the repatriation of Russian capital, taking into account global experience and the capabilities of Uzbekistan.

Literature:

Bulatov, A. S. (2005). World Economy.

Gerasimov, B. I. (2009). Macroeconomics. Transition Economy.

Kormishkina, L. A., & Lazina, O. M. (2009). Shadow Economy. Manual for Universities.

Latov, Yu. V., & Kovalev, S. N. (2006). Shadow Economy.

Cassel, D., & Cichy, U. (Year). Explaining the growing shadow economy in East and West: A comparative system approach. Comparative Economic Studies, 28, 20-41.

Feige, E. L., & Feige, E. (1979). How big is the irregular economy? Challenge, 6(22), 5-13.

Rubin, P. H. (1980). The Economics of Crime. Cambridge (Mass.).

Butterworth, J. (1994). The Theory of Price Control and Black Market. Aldershot, Avebury, 26-35.